their story

Coffee lovers Angellique Glenn (now 34 and an event coordinator) and Adrian Sunter (also 34 and in electronic trading) first met at Starbucks. Although they didn't exchange numbers that day, fate stepped in and they coincidentally became neighbors. As they ran into each other more and more, the two eventually got to know each other and started dating. Though they had talked about getting married and had even picked out a ring, five years later Angellique was hoping for an actual proposal. So while out to celebrate Angellique's birthday, Adrian popped the question in the middle of a nine-course meal. —A.W.

the cake

The delectable two-tiered cake was dressed in celery green icing with chocolate brown ribbon and metallic silver dots spaced evenly all over both tiers.

the menu

Several food stations were set up throughout the space. The Asian food station featured mini take-out boxes filled with noodles.

the bridal bouquet

Angellique carried a very modern bouquet of short, sleek, white calla lilies.

the invitations

A good friend created Angellique and Adrian's invitations. The fun, decoder-style spinners incorporated the couple's logo and signature color palette. >>

the first dance

A friend of the couple helped them choreograph their first dance song to Coldplay's "Green Eyes."

the menu

After the couple cut the cake, the two food stations were transformed into dessert stations, and mini coffee shakes and dessert wine were passed around to guests.

the reception décor

Following the ceremony, the room was transformed for the reception.

Tables were draped with white cloths and silver shimmer overlays, and white frosted votives glowed all around for a romantic feel.
