It all started with a dance. Lee Zink (28 and an oil and gas landman) couldn't resist asking Kiera Hughes (26 and a sales executive) to take a spin across the floor at a Colorado bar. She accepted and they had their first dinner date later that week. Kiera and Lee spent the next two-and-a-half years dancing and dining. Then one evening, Lee came home with a case full of wine and a dozen red roses. Lee told Kiera that the wine store next to the florist had a sale and he decided to stock up on her favorites. As Kiera was looking through the bottles she pulled out one that read "Kiera, will you marry me?" on the label. Then he got down on one knee, opened a ring box and asked her in person. "I was in shock because I wasn't expecting it to happen that way on a Friday at 5 o'clock!" says Kiera. She said yes and the couple married a year later in an outdoor fall ceremony. —CC
